And Finally....

Daugherty Field and the Gasometer

You may have seen the top photo below that has been used in publications over the years. It shows the Daugherty Field hangars, runway and biplanes in 1927. In the background is the huge natural gas storage container also know as a "gasometer". It was located near

Spring and Junipero and dominated the skyline for 70 years.

You've probably never seen the bottom photo that we stumbled upon while researching another "And Finally" story. The aerial shot is dated January 1, 1928 and shows the top of the gasometer. Until seeing the photo, we never knew "Long Beach" was painted on the top with a directional arrow pointing toward Daugherty Field. Our assumption is that the signage was used to direct aviators to the runway. That must have come in handy before the days of instrument landings.
